With the return of Lord Salisbury's power it seems to be taken for granted that a stronger foreign policy will be adopted by England. There is much need of it. As between Lord Salisbury and Lord Roseberry's personal opinions regarding foreign relations there is no much to choose, but the former will have the advantage of being supported by a strong and united party, whereas Lord Roseberry's following has been weak and divided. It is to be hoped the new Premier will take full advantage of his favourable position and make England's name abroad respected as it used to be. But it must be confessed that when Lord Salisbury was in power before England's foreign policy, in so far as China in particular was concerned, was no more satisfactory than it has been since. The same may be said with regard to India, and it was also Lord Salisbury that abandoned Madagascar to France. The position of the Conservative party then, however, was not what it is now, and in view of the state of house politics at that time there may have been some excuse for not inviting a challenge in Parliament on the Government's foreign policy.

The return of the Conservatives to power will no doubt raise high hopes in the breasts of the bi-metallicists. Mr.

Balfour, the leader of the House of Commons, is a declared bi-metallicist, and no doubt an opportunity will be taken soon after the meeting of the new Parliament to again raise a debate on the question of the standards. Although it will necessarily be treated as a non-party question, Mr. Balfour's opinions will naturally be regarded as of great weight by many of the Government's adherents who do not understand the question sufficiently to form opinions of their own upon it.

The Bi-metallic League, however, has taken measures during the election to turn the attention of candidates to this important subject and many of them will no doubt have been questioned at their election meetings as to their monetary faith. The prospects of silver therefore appear more favourable than at any previous period in the history of the question in the England, but there is grave danger that the cause of true bi-metallicism may be ruined by the mistaken advocacy of currency inflationists.
